

Government should reduce income tax during inflation

Hong Kong's economy has been booming this year. People enjoy higher income and government has huge budget surplus too. At the same time, local price level increases continuously, which leads to inflation problem.

In the 2007 policy address, Chief Executive Donald Tsang announced the reduction in income tax for the coming year, thereby returning wealth to the people. However, the tax reduction may stimulate consumption and worsen inflation. Do you think that the government should reduce income tax during inflation?
